PAN-AMERICAN FEELING GROWS SINCE WAK. LATIN STATESMEN TELL BURTON

The high altitude of the Andes possesses no terrors for Theodore E. Burton, former U. S. senator, whose journey down the west coast of South America has been attended by a display of official hospitality on a scale never before tendered a private American citizen.

The senator arrived in Santiago, Chile, by the way of the tropics through which he passed and reaching health and energy, astonishing the English-speaking colony by the manner his physique had withstood the rigors of the mountain country.

The thin air of the tremendous Andean heights, ranging from 10,000 to 15,000 feet above sea level, is itself a physical test which many American travelers find unendurable. But added to the ordinary discomfort of a reduced oxygen supply is the peculiar Andean affliction, so-called, a sort of intensified seasickness, which has not infrequently proved fatal to persons of low resistance.

Because of these conditions, Mr. Burton is one of the first Americans of prominence to visit and study the mountain regions of Peru and Bolivia. Neither Roosevelt, Root nor Robert Bacon on their memorable visits to South America, remembered to go up on the high Andes.

Mr. Burton, however, showed that his exhausting flights against the river and harbor pock barrel bill and the ship purchase bill in the Senate last fall and winter did not weaken his health. He spent two enjoyable weeks in the Andes, studying the
